Moscow Fashion Week 2026: Driving Global Demand for Natural and Man-Made Fibre Apparel

Moscow Fashion Week 2026, held from March 14–19 in Moscow, stands as an important global platform not only for fashion creativity but also for showcasing the versatility of key textile fibres used in modern apparel. With over 200 designers from Russia, Spain, China, Turkey, and Armenia, the event highlights collections crafted from cotton, wool, acrylic, polyester, and viscose, reflecting both sustainability and performance-driven fashion trends.

The show plays a crucial role in promoting natural fibres such as cotton and wool, valued for comfort and sustainability, while also demonstrating the innovation and affordability offered by man-made fibres like polyester, acrylic, and viscose. Through runway shows, expert talks, and showrooms, Moscow Fashion Week strengthens global awareness of fibre diversity and stimulates demand for advanced textile materials across international apparel markets.
